DETAILED ACTION

Specification

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 101

1. 35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

Claims 1 – 6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the disclosed invention is inoperative and therefore lacks utility. The applicant states that the circuit claimed will induce a current of the opposite polarity during zero current periods of a pulsed DC signal on page 4, lines 26 –29 of their specification. This does not appear to be true. While the inductive devices maintain a charge during the positive current periods of the DC signal when the field in the inductive device breaks down during zero current periods the current output will be in the same direction as positive DC signal. No inversion will occur. If this is not the case, the examiner respectfully request a further explanation of how the direction of the current is reverse to provide a current of opposite polarity. The references of Meier (US 5999426 A) and Manley et al. (US 5815388 A) teach typical prior polarity reversal circuits.
